

I'm not robot

Continue

American gods season 3 episode 2 release date

1

2

3

4

5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18

19

20

21

22

23

24

25

26

27

28

29

30

31

32

33

34

35

36

37

38

39

40

41

42

43

44

45

46

47

48

49

50

51

52

53

54

55

56

57

58

59

60

61

62

63

64

65

66

67

68

69

70

71

72

73

74

75

76

77

78

79

80

81

82

83

84

85

86

87

88

89

90

91

92

93

94

95

96

97

98

99

100

101

102

103

104

105

106

107

108

109

110

111

112

113

114

115

116

117

118

119

120

121

122

123

124

125

126

127

128

129

130

131

132

133

134

135

136

137

138

139

140

141

142

143

144

145

146

147

148

149

150

151

152

153

154

155

156

157

158

159

160

161

162

163

164

165

Mr. Wednesday followed up his epic crowd surfing in the premiere with an even more athletic feat in Sunday’s Episode 2: a vodka-fueled, slap-filled dance/altercation with Czernobog. The spectacle takes place in Chicago, at a memorial service for the late, lamented Zorya Vechernyaya, who you’ll recall died in the Season 2 premiere. Wednesday is there to mourn his fallen friend, yes, but also to continue drumming up support for his holy war. Shadow also attends, at the request of Zorya Polunochnyaya, aka the sister who gave him the moon/his coin in Season 1. Anyway, Czernobog is not terribly excited to see Wednesday, because he blames him for Zorya Vechernyaya’s death. But old Odin isn’t about to let hard feelings stop him from recruiting the many Slavic deities who have assembled for the wake. So words are exchanged and threats are made… and then all of a sudden, the two old gods are engaged in some rough-and-tumble feats of bellicose strength. “Did you like that?” series star Ian McShane asked when TVLine references the scene in a recent interview. “We came up with the thing because we wanted to bring Peter [Stormare, who plays Czernobog] back in, because he’s so terrific… It’s actually Peter’s idea, the dance. The slapping came from some crazy Scandinavian dance that they used to do. You’ll have to ask him about it. Whatever. Anyway, we incorporated it with the choreography into an all-around other dance, and it seemed to work pretty well.” Naturally, we asked McShane if he and Stormare filmed some of the more athletic choreography. He laughed heartily in response. “You must be joking! No, we did the slapping. Actually, we only did, like, three takes of the dance. So it worked out pretty well,” he recalled, still chuckling. “Natural dancer.” Elsewhere in the episode:
* On his way to Chicago, Wednesday stops to see Tyr, the Norse god of war and justice, who’s masquerading as a pediatric dentist named Dr. Tyrell. (Tyr is played by American Horror Story’s Dais O’Hare.) Tyr writes him a check to support the war effort, but is dismayed to realize that Wednesday stole a postcard from his office.
* Shadow rents a car from Marguerite Olsen, his frosty neighbor, so he can drive to Chicago. On the way, he hits a deer; Shadow is OK, but the vehicle is damaged. When he arrives in the Windy City, he spends some time on a rooftop with Zorya Polunochnyaya, who offers him cryptic advice (“When you cannot see your way, the night sky will guide you”) and then puts his coin up back up into the sky as easily as she’d plucked it down.
* Poor Salim thinks The Jinn left because Wednesday sent him on a mission. Wednesday neither confirms nor denies it.
* In her special way, Bilquis absorbs the tech CEO she’s been sleeping with. But the moment he’s fully inside, something is wrong. She leans to the side of her bed and vomits, then looks like she’s in extreme distress.
* Back in Lakeside, Shadow doesn’t understand why everyone who’d been so kind and welcoming when he arrived suddenly scowls at him like he’s a criminal. Welp, it’s because they think he’s a criminal. While he was away, a local teen named Alison McGovern (the girl who helped Shadow at her father’s store earlier in the episode) went missing. Chad the Cop questions Shadow about where he’s been, why he had his windshield replaced, yadda yadda. He’s eventually cleared of any suspicion.
* Later that night, while Shadow is gathering wood for his fireplace, he sees a peacock in the woods. When he returns to his apartment, a conciliatory Marguerite is there, apologizing for how they’d gotten off on the wrong foot. He shows her that he got the body shop to save a decal that was affixed to the windshield; she tells him that her son is at school in Florida, but doesn’t volunteer any more information. Now it’s your turn. What did you think of the episode? Sound off in the comments! In front of the camera, a lot has changed for Shadow Moon since we saw him leaving Cairo in the season two finale, with the upcoming episodes revealing he’s started a secret new life away from Mr Wednesday. But of course, it’s only a matter of time before he’s found out and reeled back into the war between old gods and their new counterparts, inspired by the likes of technology and media.The insane trailer teases an awakening for Shadow Moon, as he boldly proclaims in the closing moments that he is a god, but what exactly brings him to this realisation remains to be seen.We also catch a glimpse of some of the new cast members in action, including Shril star Julia Sweeney as Hinzelmann, an antagonistic local in the sleepy town of Lakeside, Wisconsin.Here’s everything we know so far about American Gods season three, including cast, trailer and release date news.By entering your details, you are agreeing to our terms and conditions and privacy policy. You can unsubscribe at any time.When is American Gods season 3’s release date?American Gods season three will premiere on Amazon Prime Video on Monday 11th January 2021, following the Starz premiere across the pond the night prior.The latest trailer previously promised that we’d be seeing new episodes in “early 2021”.Who’s in the cast for American Gods season three?(Getty Images)Several members of the main cast are expected to return, including Ricky Whittle (Shadow Moon), Ian McShane (Odin/Mr Wednesday), Emily Browning (Laura Moon), and Crispin Glover (Mr World).In addition, musician Marilyn Manson has now joined the cast as a new character, a “Nordic death metal frontman” named Johan Wengren who has ties to Ian McShane’s Wednesday through his “Viking metal band” Blood Death.“Bringing his specific energy, wit and boundless enthusiasm for all-things-Neil Gaiman to the role of Johan, a Norse ‘berserker’ in service to Odin, his performance promises to be disturbing, original and uniquely entertaining,” showrunner Chic Egglee said.Manson is expected to appear in four episodes of the third season.More recently, Neil Gaiman also confirmed that veteran actress Blythe Danner will appear across four episodes in the new series as Demeter, the Greek goddess of the harvest with an “unresolved romantic history” with Mr Wednesday and a bit of a problem - her involuntary commitment to a mental institution.“It is a rare privilege to be working with Ms. Blythe Danner, a dear friend, inspiration and national treasure,” said executive producer and showrunner Chic Egglee.“She is our muse in crafting the role of Demeter, since no one else can bring such ethereal beauty and grace to the portrayal of a goddess.”The trailer shown at New York Comic-Con (more on that below) has also offered our first glimpse at two other new additions: Game of Thrones star Iwan Rheon as Iprechaun Leon Doyle and Machete actor Danny Trejo as a new incarnation of Mr World.However, some of the original stars won’t be returning for the third run, including Orlando Jones, who played Mr. Nancy on the show, because his character does not appear in the section of Gaiman’s book that is being covered in series three. Jones spoke about his character’s absence in a heated interview with TV Line.Neil Gaiman has since clarified that the cast members not returning for season three have not been “fired”, and that there are plans to bring them back in a prospective fourth season.He told Digital Spy: “I think there was a lot of confusion and I think it probably could have been handled much better, and that’s including communicating with the cast over what was happening in this season, and what’s going to be happening in season four.”I’ll put it this way: there are a lot of actors who seem to think that they’ve been fired because they weren’t in season three, and you’re sort of going, ‘You’re not in this season because stuff is happening in the season that you’re not in. That doesn’t mean you’re not coming back.’Joining Jones in leaving the cast is Mousa Kraish, who played Jinn in the opening two series. He posted the news on Twitter, claiming it had been an honour to play the character and that he was “humbled & grateful for this wonderful community”.What has Neil Gaiman revealed about American Gods season three?Neil Gaiman at the launch of American Gods (Getty)Neil Gaiman hasn’t said a great deal so far about what we can expect in the third instalment of the show, but the author has spoken out about the appointment of Charles “Chic” Egglee (The Walking Dead) as the series’ new showrunner.“I’m thrilled American Gods has been renewed for a third season, and even more thrilled that I’m getting to work on it with Chic Egglee,” he said in a statement.“Chic is the best partner-in-crime. We’ve been working for weeks now on the shape of the season and I’m delighted that he gets to carry the American Gods torch on to glory.”He’s also revealed that some of the series will take place at Lakeside, a mysterious location referenced in the books where Shadow Moon hides out for a period of time.Is there an American Gods season three trailer?There certainly is and it doesn’t disappoint.The trailer was revealed at New York Comic-Con and sees Shadow Moon hiding out in a sleepy town by the name of Lakeside, which will be instantly familiar to fans of Gaiman’s novel.Much of the trailer focuses on the troubled relationship between Shadow and Mr Wednesday, before introducing some of the key players in the upcoming season, including Game of Thrones star Iwan Rheon and the legendary Danny Trejo.Check out the trailer below:Why were there issues filming American Gods season two?Despite a critically acclaimed and popular first season, American Gods has encountered a rocky couple of years, facing a series of tumultuous, behind-the-scenes issues during the run-up to season two.The original showrunners Bryan Fuller and Michael Green were already part way through writing season two when they dramatically left the production in 2017, as did Sex Education actress Gillian Anderson, who played Media. New showrunner Jesse Alexander was brought in as their replacement, but he too stepped aside in September 2018.The drama finally made it to our screens in March 2019 - but the second season was still a bit of a critical let down, not garnering the same praise as season one.Fingers crossed the third season resurrects some of the show’s original charm… But for now we have to keep on waiting!American Gods returns to Amazon Prime Video in 2021. While you’re waiting, visit our TV Guide to see what’s on tonight, or check out our guide to new TV shows 2020 to find out what’s airing this autumn and beyond.

166

167

168

169

170

171

172

173

174

175

176

177

178

179

180

181

182

183

184

185

186

187

188

189

190

191

192

193

194

195

196

197

198

199

200

201

202

203

204

205

206

207

208

209

210

211

212

213

214

215

216

217

218

219

220

221

222

223

224

225

226

227

228

229

230

231

232

233

234

235

236

237

238

239

240

241

242

243

244

245

246

247

248

249

250

251

252

253

254

255

256

257

258

259

260

261

262

263

264

265

266

267

268

269

270

271

272

273

274

275

276

277

278

279

280

281

282

283

284

285

286

287

288

289

290

291

292

293